A Heavy Holstein.

A. C. Cleveland writes to the editor of the APPEAL that on June 5 a Holstein calf was dropped on his ranch at Cleveland, White Pine county, which when two hours old weighed 109lbs. The heifer, Elfrida 2nd, (No. 8510, Vol. 3, H. H. B.) was but two years and ten months old. The sire of the calf, Xenophon 2nd, (No. 1583, Vol. 1, H. H. B.) lacked nearly three months of being two years old at the time the calf was dropped. The claim that this stock matures younger than any other seems to be pretty well substantiated.

AN AWE-INSPIRING SIGHT.

An Immense Wheel of Light

Revolving in the Skies.

About 7 o'clock on Saturday evening those who looked upon the Eastern sky saw an exhibition which they will not soon forget.

At first it seemed as if the sun, which had just gone down behind the Sierra Range, was suddenly re-appearing from the Eastern horizon.

At first there was a dull copper glow, which changed to a fiery red and yellow, and then a dozen shafts of white light shot upward almost to the center of the sky's arch.

These broad bands of light diverged from a common center, seemingly just in the rear of Mt. Davidson, and were accompanied by tremendous changes of color and occasional flashes.

Presently the strange light seemed like the spokes of a gigantic wheel, and the spokes began slowly to revolve, as if the wheel were moving from South to North.

One shaft of the wheel would slowly sink in the Northern side and another one make its appearance from the South.

Mingled with these rays, which were perfectly well defined, were yellow, blue and green masses of clouds, rent and torn by the onward sweep of the wheel, assuming endless shapes and colors.

The background of this sublime picture was a broad curtain of blue and black. As the day declined the dull copper glow turned to gold, and the greenish tinge was a flaming emerald with detached patches of bloody red sprinkled over everything.

These interwoven colors were driven by a whirlwind which sucked them into eddies, gathered them from nothing, twisted, moulded and dyed them and flung them into space again.

The great wheel lengthened its spokes to the zenith, and with its huge axis on the horizon's edge, rolled through a living path of fire to the Northward, and with it the whirlwind. As it advanced the sky above it assumed an angrier cast until one wondered why the mass which shed a lustre like red hot iron did not also send forth a terrible heat.

Presently a long cloud flung itself across the sky in the West, and driven by the wind passed over to the East. It was a cloud that resembled ashes in hue but the instant it came within range of the big wheel it was transformed into a broad belt of gold.

A few moments later and the wind had torn it to shreds, cut it into patches, recolored it, thrown it between the spokes of the wheel and woven it into the gorgeous tapestry of light and shade that hung in the East.

The scene lasted half an hour, during which time the familiar objects of the landscape assumed a rosy hue and the very air seemed tinted. The question arises: Where did this strange light come from?

CARSON WINS.

The Amateurs Scoup the Resolute on Sunday.

The game of base ball between the Resolute of Virginia City and the Amateurs of Carson City for $100 a side drew a large crowd to the grounds on Sunday last.

When the two clubs reached the field the difference in the physique of the two organizations was a matter of comment. The Carson club was composed of young men, some mere boys, while the Virginia club was made up of men whose axes clustered about the 30 notch.

When the game was called the Resolute took the bat. McNulty pitching, for Carson, the Virginia men hammered out three runs.

The Carson boys changed places and were considerably puzzled by Kelly's heavy pitching and only got one run.

The next three innings gave the Resolute six runs and the Amateurs two. Both sides now warmed up to their work and each side gave the other a white-wash.

The Resolute then sailed in with considerable vim and scratched one run from the melee and Carson got another white-wash.

About this time the men who had put up their ducats on the Carson side were considerably low in the mouth and began to scour the grounds for favorable opportunities to hedge.

McNulty who puts all his strength into his pitching showed signs of distress and Cowing was substituted. The change was a good one for Carson and the Comstockers were not quick to understand the difference in the pitching.

The pitching of Kelly of Virginia who had done such execution early in the game, was no longer a novelty and the Carson batters having gauged his range and delivery, began to put in some solid work and rapidly closed the gap.

Youth and activity soon began to tell and as they hammered out run after run, the excitement rose to a fever pitch and the shouts of the crowd could be heard all over the valley, cheering encouragement.

It nerved up the boys and they played with such good spirit that when the Comstockers closed their ninth inning the score stood nine to nine and Carson ready for one more tussle with the hickory.

When the 12th run was made and the batter landed on the home plate, one concentrated yell went up from the spectators that shook the dust down from the Capitol cupola.

Another run was made "just for a flyer" and the game was closed, the Carson nine being about exhausted from its efforts. It is generally conceded that the heavy batting of Cowing and Newham, saved the game.

Each made a home run. Alley's catching and Fryer's work as short stop were splendid. The following is the score:

Valuable Shorthorns for Nevada. The APPEAL learns from the St. Paul Pioneer Press of a recent date, that at H. F. Brown's Eighth Annual Sale of Shorthorn Cattle, which took place the previous day, there was a large attendance and heavy bidding, and the sale was probably the most successful ever held in that city or State.

Thirty-three head were sold, averaging $917 per head. The highest-priced animals were bought by W. J. Marsh, of Fort Churchill, Nevada, as follows: Wild Eyes Duchess 12th, $1,450; imported Duke of Brownale 6th, $1,800. These animals will be a great acquisition to the shorthorn interest of Nevada, and we are glad our friend Marsh has captured them.

A RHEUMATIC CONGREGATION

Which Gathered to Hear Rev. Van Deventer Preach.

On Sunday morning the Methodist Church was crowded with people, and among the congregation were noticed many people who are not known as habitual church goers.

While there was a marked increase in the congregation of Mr. Van Deventer there was a corresponding falling off in the attendance of the other churches.

One thing particularly noticeable was the number of rheumatic persons in the church. Judge Sabin, a dyed-in-the-wool Episcopalian, was there with a lame rheumatic leg; Postmaster White managed to hobble in with a crutch and was seated near the door. Gen. Clarke, who occasionally has a twinge of rheumatism in his left leg, was on hand, and so was Kaiser of the Ormsby House, and John Sweeney, the horseman, who has rheumatism bad every now and then.

In addition to these, were about fifty old chronic rheumatics all waiting anxiously for the sermon which had been advertised as follows in the Tribune:

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—E. W. Van Deventer, pastor. Preaching in the morning and at 7:30 P. M. Sunday School at 12 M. Morning theme: "Receipt for the Cure of Rheumatism."

The discourse, however, contained not the faintest allusion to the question of rheumatism. It was a vigorous and able attack on the hoodlum element of the city.

When the plate was passed around several of the old rheumatics refused to give a cent, and after the service was over they hobbled home growling audibly.

It leaked out after the service that the announcement of the subject of the discourse was a typographical error. The Reverend gentleman had for his text, "Receipt for the Cure of Hoodlumism," and the compositor ran in the word "rheumatism" instead. When the rheumatics were made acquainted with mistake they all had a good hearty laugh and shake up, which all say rather benefitted their ailment, and they now all admit that the discourse on hoodlumism also did them much good and gave them food for serious reflection.

The Chesley Divorce. The Post of Saturday has the following:

Eleanor B. Chesley, known on the stage as Eleanor Barry, began suit today to compel her divorced husband, James G. Chesley, to pay alimony, as ordered by the Court. The complaint sets forth that on March 16th the lady began suit in San Mateo for divorce, and that her husband failing to put in any answer the divorce was granted by default, and she was awarded $25 a week alimony and taxed costs. For some time James G. Chesley paid the money, but on and after May 30th he refused to pay her any money, and she now brings suit.

To a Post reporter today Eleanor Barry said that her husband's assault on John Chretien, the lawyer was made more than six weeks after the divorce was granted. She said that since the divorce Mr. Chesley had behaved very badly to her, and when Mr. Chretien called, at her request, to consult about his testimony in reference to preliminary steps in the divorce case with which he was familiar, Mr. Chesley waylaid and assaulted him. Chretien had been a mutual friend before the proceedings, and had tried to bring them together, but failed, owing to the interference of a third party. After the divorce Chesley said it was illegal, and he would have it set aside because of informality, and she had asked Chretien to give his evidence, if necessary, about the validity of the proceedings. Chesley had threatened to drive all her friends from her and stop all her amusements, so that, being without means or friends, she would be glad to return to him.
